

The Farm at Miller's Crossing

Week of August 17th 2009

518.851.2331

farmatmillerscrossing.com

The Back view of the newly enclosed wash area

Animal Antics on the Farm...

Last week I walked out the door in the morning to a strange site; Chris was walking around the car jumping towards it a yelling "Yah...Yahhh...yah". When he saw me standing there he asked me, "Did you close the doors to the Suburban last night?" I answered yes, hardly thinking I could have done something wrong.

Apparently in the time that it took us to unload the four sleeping children, three barn cats had curiously crept into the car. I went out to put the pony out and seeing that we left a door open, casually closed it as I walked by. When it occurred to them that they couldn't climb out as easily as they had gotten in I do not know, but in their attempts to get out the windows, a cat stepped upon the lock button and locked all three cats as well as the keys in the car (having those buttons on the armrest is a serious flaw in our vehicles design)

All that jumping at the car was Chris' attempt to scare them into stepping back on the unlock button....but it never works that way does it.? Instead AAA came within the hour and unlocked the Suburban. The guy asked if we wanted the cats out of the car..."Yes, I said, definitely yes".

Enjoy the share, Katie

Volunteer Sunflowers in the barnyard

The Side View of our newly enclosed wash area